

Ensuring constituent service for citizens of 10th legislative district a key priority

SPRINGFIELD, Illinois – This week, John G. Mulroe took the oath of office to begin his service as State Senator of Illinois' 10th legislative district. Mulroe was appointed to fill the position recently vacated by retiring Senator James DeLeo.

"I am honored to begin my service as state senator of the 10th District," Mulroe said. "I am committed to addressing the serious issues that our state is facing."

Senator Mulroe was born and raised in Chicago. He and his wife Margaret, and their four children, reside in the Edison Park neighborhood. Mulroe is a practicing attorney and his wife works at St. Juliana School as a preschool teacher and administrative assistant.

While the General Assembly isn't scheduled to reconvene in Springfield until November, the newly appointed Senator said he was in the process of ensuring that residents of the 10th Senate District continue to have available a constituent service office to turn to as soon as possible.

"With more and more people relying on the services of state government due to our nation's economy, we are working quickly to provide a place for constituent services for the community," Mulroe said. "Our residents deserve the same access to government afforded to every other resident in the state."

As a former prosecutor in the Cook County State's Attorney's office, cleaning up government corruption and bringing jobs to Illinois are Senator Mulroe's top priorities. He is also committed to remedying Illinois' growing fiscal deficit.

"The people of Illinois deserve an open and honest government," Mulroe said. "As a state senator, I will do everything in my power to maintain a state government that our citizens can be proud of."
